CHECKS FOR WAGES SYSTEM ON TRIAL

Does Not Seem to Work as Well as Expected.

UNPOPULAR WITH CLERKS

Not Such a Safeguard as Secretary Shaw Anticipated-Did Net Work Long Ago.

One more trial will be given the plan

The Secretary learned that the clerks were against the check system almost unanimously. They like to have the "un diluted extract" in their pockets when they leave their desks on the afternoons the 1st and the 15th of every month, for diluted extract" in their pockets when they leave their desks on the afternoons then they can make what purchases they desire to make without having to go to a bank during the lunch hour to get checks cashed, or wait until the next day.

It was particularly inconvenient this month because the two pay days fell on Saturday, when the banks ciosed at noon. Many clerks were unable to get their checks cashed when they left the departments at 1 o'clock and were forced to wait until Monday.

In one of his talks with employes, Secretary Shaw learned that many years ago, when the check system was in vogue, a disbursing officer of the of the departments was enabled to make a heavy defalcation on account of the heavy defalcation on account of the system and that it was not, after all, as safe as he had believed it to be.

Keep Is Considering.

Mr. Keep is considering the question with a view to a recommendation from his committee as to the adoption of the check system by all the department The operation of the plan at the end of this month will be watched closely by Secretary Shaw and Mr. Keep.
If they decide it is as bad as the clerks claim it to be, Secretary Shaw will abandon it as far as the Treasury is concerned. Mr. Keep will probably recommend that it be not extended to any other departments.

If it is abandoned in the Treasury, Secretary Metcalf will probably follow suit and go back to the cash system in the Department of Commerce and Laicr.

supply will be increased to 116,000,000 gallons per day.

While all three Commissioners have expressed their surprise at Colonel Leach's report, there is not the slightest alarm. It is believed the situation can easily be handled.

It was explained today by a man thoroughly conversant with the water supply of the District that, if there is any danger of the fifteen beds not furnishing enough water to meet the demand, the best thing to do is to postpone the opening of the big filtration plant until the twenty-four beds are ready for operation. These, as already stated, will furnish 96,000,000 gallons of water under ordinary pressure.

people who, besides doing more or less gambling in cotton that frequently is gambling in cotton that frequently is only imaginary, sell most of America's cotton crop. They have their houses in Liverpool and Manchester and London and the cities of Germany and the rest of the Continent.

It is in the feeling of foreign buyers of American cotton that the seriousness of the situation is more manifest. There is hardly a house with foreign connections that has not been asked lately to explain the Government leaks and manipulation.

It is against these demoralizing conditions that the dealers in this city enter most strenuous objection. The difficulty is that they are fearful of taking, openly, a hand in the efforts to hunt offenders to justice. However direct and unimpeachable may seem the evidence that some particular interest is rigging the market by using doctored reports, not another firm will take steps to stop the trans-

Much Harm Done.

The idea that the Government report was of doubtful integrity had been en-tertained here so long that possible n,anipulation of it was largely dis-counted in most cases. Brokers and merchants secured their own advices and made their own reports.

But abroad it was otherwise. The But abroad it was otherwise. The Englishman or German, with his traditional and unquestioning acceptance of Government information as authentic, had been assuming that the Federal crop reports must be entitled to about the same credence as the Scriptures.

To discover, therefore, that the Government reports were manipulated by speculators, at will, caused a decline of foreign confidence. This has had, and will, for a long time to come, continue to have, serious consequences.

The fact remains that they are the people who, heading more or less.

action. It is the cowardice of commerce the weakness of trade.

President Hubbard and Superintendent King, of the Cotton Exchange, have been anxious that the Department of Justice should succeed in its efforts to punish the criminals. They have expressed themselves many times and most emphatically as having confidence in the intentions and integrity of Secretary Wilson tary Wilson.

Hands Are Tied.

But they, like most other men in this trade in New York, feel that their hands Whatever they might do would be misconstrued. They feel that every other interest is suspicious of the good faith of New York, and so New York has been able to contribute little o the unraveling of the tangle. Probably if New York could have its own way, it would have all Government crop reports abolished. Then every inblained, depends almost absolutely on the treest in the market would seek its own advices; the one that was shrewdest oth his purchases of cotton for the and best equipped to get the reports, coming season's business and his sales cleverest in deducting correct conclu-both his purchases of cotton for the coming season's business and his sales of cotton fabrics. If his advices warrant large purchases of cotton, on the supposition that it is likely to advance, he may lay in a large share of his year's supply by purchases of futures, before the actual cotton is out of the boll, and before he even knows whether there is a weev'll inside the boll along with the cotton.

Having bought his raw cotton for future delivery at a certain price, the manufacturer next fixes his selling prices on such basis as to earn him a business profit in making that cotton into fabrics. Presently he discovers that he was buying cotton on the strength of manipulated reports. He paid too much. The competitor who waited and bought later gets it cheaper and can undersell him.

Where Losses Come.

Or it may work the other way. The manufacturer may study the reports and, concluding that cotton is going to be cheaper later, postpone buying.

When it is too late he finds that the rank is incontinued by the reports and controversy.
